

Other Factors to Consider

Now that you know your guardrails, let's talk about other factors to consider when determining a starting wage:

- The candidate's experience is one thing. Never assign someone a wage without first checking out what they are capable of. Remember to review Workday for prior experience for rehires.
- Consider the current staffing pressures, but be reasonable and balanced in what you offer. Your RTMs' future ability to get wage increases will be affected by your decision.
- You also have to remember your guardrails and keep your eye on the RTM average pay. Consider the long term impact on your team if they knew their new teammate started out at a much higher rate than anyone is currently making.

Make your decision a fair one that takes into consideration the internal equity at your cafe. It needs to be equal pay for equal work.
